

Climate Nexus Communications Fellowship

Climate Nexus is a strategic non-profit communications group dedicated to highlighting the impacts of climate change and clean energy solutions, both domestically and internationally.

For our Climate Fellows program, we are seeking three highly motivated college graduates who are interested in getting hands-on communications experience and working on climate and clean energy issues.

Fellows will learn the basics of strategic communications and media relations at a nonprofit working at the center of the climate movement. The positions are based in New York City and open to applicants with an undergraduate or advanced degree. Fellows will focus on a range of projects, including longer-term and day-to-day tasks assigned by their team.

The Fellowship lasts for six months and the Winter/Spring program runs from January through the end of May. Interviews begin in late October and run through November and December.

OUR ISSUES

We work with leading national and international NGOs, public and academic institutions, business, medical, faith and scientific leaders, economists, and grassroots activists to expand and deepen media coverage of climate-related issues, enrich public understanding of climate change, and showcase solutions. Fellows will get a broad-based experience working on climate communications as it relates to public policy, public health, business, community organizing, and sustainable development.

Applicants should possess the following characteristics:

- Diligent work ethic and attention to detail
- Demonstrated interest in news/current events, climate and energy issues
- Strong research skills, ability to write clearly and concisely
- Willingness to hustle and pitch in where necessary, ability to work with a team
- Ability to balance multiple projects, prioritize
- Computer skills including Word, PowerPoint and Excel
- Strong social media skills, research skills and experience working with databases, are a plus

DETAILS

- Fellows must be able to work 40 hours/week Monday - Friday on a roughly 9-5 schedule
- Compensation: $15/hour
